UNIT-II

3. (A) Read the following passage carefully and answer questions given below:- 1x5=5

Friends are very important for all of us but they must be chosen carefully. A friend is not one who helps you in your need. We all help each other to make our lives easy and smooth. Your friend to you should be more than a helper. A helper cannot be called a friend. A friend thinks about your well being more than you because he knows about you more than you know about yourself. A true friend is he who hides your demerits from others and reveals your qualities to the world. A good friend shares your mind as well as head. He is always at your beck and call without letting you know. There are many things that you cannot talk about with your children but through your friend you can pass it to your children. A true friend will complete your unfinished works even after you are no more in this world, though he may not be your follower. A true friend never asks for any help because he expects that you will help him without being asked. Usually our friends are different in taste and nature from us but that is the beauty of friendship. A true friend compensates your demerits and loves you for your peculiarities. So if you have a friend who is unlike you, don't worry.

Questions: -
